Chamber of Commerce Plans Program For Fire Prevention Week

A program for Fire Prevention Week, October 3-9, has been planned by the Fire Prevention committee of the Chamber of Commerce that will affect practically everyone in the city. Chairman George Underwood has announced.

The week's events will get underway with a television program at 5 p.m. Sunday featuring a panel-type discussion and a film.

Highlighting the observance will be a fair open daily at 301 Battleground Avenue. Seventeen different local organizations and business firms are putting up displays to illustrate the many fire hazards and methods of prevention.

These include the Greensboro Fire Department, Auxiliary Fire Department of Civil Defense, School Fire Patrol, Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, N. C. Forestry Service, fire prevention exhibits, modern kitchen by the Young Ladies Insurance Exchange in co-operation with Duke Power Co. and Sears Roebuck & Co., first aid in fire fighting by Fire Fighters Sales, natural gas by Piedmont Natural Gas Co., oil heating by Southern Sales Co., "What's the Fire Problem?" by the City of Greensboro, fire department communications, Greensboro Fire Prevention Bureau, Gloomy Joe and his associates, the Guilford County Fire Departments, and the Firemen's Ladies Auxiliary.

Also featured at the fair will be several firms, to be shown continuously, of some of the larger recent fires in Greensboro, a film prepared by the Chamber of Commerce at Irving Park School, and a brief movie from the National Chamber of Commerce.

Another important activity of the week will be the building inspection conducted next Thursday by 70 members of the Stock Fire Insurance Club of North Carolina. S. F. Padgett, a member of the Chamber's Fire Prevention Committee, who will be in charge of the inspection, said that Greensboro will be the largest city ever inspected under the club's program. More than 200 buildings will be visited by the group, but no structures will be included that have sprinkler systems. This event is being planned under the invitation of Mayor Robert H. Frazier with the approval of the local Board of Realtors and the Merchants Association.

Other activities have been planned to make Greensboro citizens conscious of the danger of fires. The Junior Chamber of Commerce will conduct its annual window display contest, city schools will have special drills, civic clubs are planning to conduct fire prevention programs, films will be shown at local theaters, and the Fire Prevention Bureau will continue a Home Inspection Program started previously.

Cone Tests Find Way To Cut Down Pollution

(The following article appeared in the Greensboro Record Friday, September 24.)

"A major advance in treating certain textile mill wastes as a means of abating stream pollution has been achieved here in the laboratory of Cone Mills Corp. in the face of some authoritative opinion that it wasn't feasible. Details of the research were first reported just recently at a symposium in Atlanta on waste treatment and stream pollution.

One Day At A Time

Excess packing material is a fire hazard. Bring in only enough for one day.

"Through experiments carried out since the first of this year in a pilot plant set up in the laboratory, it has been proven that raw and highly alkaline textile mill wastes can be treated biologically with municipal sewage to a high degree of success. Besides achieving excellent reduction of pollution in the waste water, the results also have shown good color removal (from dyes, etc.) and that odors are effectively controlled.

Effort Far-Reaching

"Implications of these experiments are far-reaching for areas plagued with stream pollution problems stemming from improperly treated textile mill and city sewage wastes. Such a problem has existed in the Greensboro area for a number of years.

"Both of the city's disposal plants—one on South Buffalo Creek and the other on North Buffalo Creek—through which both industrial wastes and sewage pass are overloaded, and the city, with Cone's co-operation, is exerting great effort to solve the problem. All information on the Cone experiments will be furnished to cities in which Cone plants are situated in an effort to aid in cleaning up dirty stream conditions.

"Main aim of the research was to achieve effective treatment without the expensive step of pretreating the textile wastes with acids or other chemicals to neutralize them. Two processes were therefore set up for treating a mixture of mill waste and sewage. One was to run the mixture through a high-rate trickling filter and then through activated sludge. The other was use of the trickling filter alone and simple sedimentation.

Term Explained

"A trickling filter is a bed of small stones over which the waste is sprayed and through which it trickles to a drain below. While trickling through bacteria oxidize and stabilize the polluting material in the water. A high-rate trickling filter is one through which the waste may be recirculated; it is better suited to treatment of strong wastes. Activated sludge is a process in which the waste material is mixed with 20 to 35 per cent of its volume of bacteria-containing sludge. This mixture is agitated with air, suspended solids settle out, and the clear fluid is drawn off."

"The pilot plant was designed to handle a flow of from 50 to 125 gallons per 24-hour day from a storage tank in the lab to which sewage and textile mill wastes were delivered for mixing in proper proportion.

"The process was started Feb. 9 on raw sewage taken from a line at North Buffalo Creek disposal plant. For a number of days it operated on sewage only, building up a good bacteria growth on the filter rocks. Then textile mill wastes were added in gradually increased amounts until a ratio of 40 per cent mill waste and 60 per cent sewage was reached—that proportion being about the same as that going through the city's disposal plants.

Filters Adapted

"When the flow through the pilot plant was increased to the capacity of 125 gallons per day, it was necessary to let the filters adapt themselves to the 40-60 ratio and greater alkalinity. Holding the alkalinity to a moderate level until the filters adjusted themselves, it was then permitted to rise. The extreme care used in gradually acclimating the filters and activated sludge to the highly textile waste is considered the key to success of the process.

"In terms of specific results, just how efficient did the two methods of treatment prove to be?

"The high-rate trickling filter and activated sludge process reduced the oxygen-consuming materials causing pollution between 90 and 96 per cent throughout a 30-day period. Alkalinity was sharply reduced. And suspended solids

A Serious Danger

Newspapers and radio stations have constantly been confronted with the problem of what to do with anonymous calls and letters.

It is extremely dangerous to permit a practice whereby people, without identifying themselves, can vilify and abuse other people regardless of whether it is about fluoridation or anything else.

We cannot justify a reason why the average citizen should not be made to identify himself or herself when using public pulse columns in newspapers, public forums over radio stations, and other methods of public communications. Responsibility is one of the keystones on democratic principles and privileges.

It is a general practice of newspapers not to print communications unless they know the identity of the sender. Some newspapers are willing to file the identity and print the communication under some other designation; however, by having the name of the sender on file, such party can be held responsible for what he says.

There seems to be a fad or a growing practice to permit forums over the radio which do not require the identity of the speaker. Such a situation can lead to serious danger; in fact, it could become a tool of cunning non-American activity. It certainly can be used to bring about dissension and bitterness among people which would not exist otherwise by unfair types of propaganda which mislead people who are unable to determine the true facts in the case. By knowing the identity of such persons indulging in this type of communication to the public, the average person has a better chance of evaluating what is said.

By the use of such a non-identity forum it is entirely possible for outsiders to be brought in and to pose as local citizens in order to promote a particular cause whether or not it be to the best interest of the city or the people.

We are a strong believer in democratic principles, and responsible free speech, but we are definitely opposed to a type of forum which enables participants to withhold their identity.

Now Is Time To Contribute To Children's Home Society

One of a series of features written exclusively for North Carolina weeklies.

By Gertrude Walton Atkins
 The youngest and most helpless citizens in the state have a haven at The Children's Home Society of North Carolina in Greensboro.

Hundreds of homeless children have been helped by the Society since its beginning over half a century ago. As the only state-wide, voluntarily supported agency in North Carolina to handle adoptions, the Society always has had a dual objective: "to find a home for the child that needs a home and a child for the home that needs a child."

Why have such an organization? Why not handle the transfer of human relationships in more direct manner, from natural mother to adoptive mother through a well-meaning friend? Because tragedy too often results. Human ties are too fragile to be transferred without every protection modern science can provide.

Yet a child is necessary to make a most homes complete, a fact many childless couples realize after several years of married life . . . couples like Marge and Jim. They had been married seven years when they found they couldn't have a baby. They had just bought their own home, a neat ranch-style house in a Wilmington suburb. The only thing missing was a baby.

They applied at every adoption agency in North Carolina, only to find the demand for babies was ten to every one child available for adoption. The "red tape," which they later found was for their own protection as well as that of the child seemed insurmountable.

Their need for a baby shrank into a sickly, chronic hankering. When Marge's mother, vacationing at a summer resort in another state, heard of a baby soon to be born who would be available for adoption, she phoned Marge and Jim. They responded eagerly and affirmatively.

Refusing to worry about the words of caution they had heard in regard to "safe adoption procedures" they flew to the resort to make necessary arrangements to get the baby. They returned with Robbie in their arms.

In their happiness over Robbie, they overlooked the gnawing doubt even then in their minds. In the haste of the proceedings, they had neglected to get a birth certificate or any other legal documents to verify the adoption.

They saw the consequences of their oversight a month later when a man called to inform them that Robbie's mother wanted him back, that she had changed her mind. Marge and Jim understood.

That day they made the first of a series of payments, never regular, never for a fixed amount . . . buying permission to keep Robbie with them. They considered going to a lawyer, but they knew they had broken the law in taking the boy. They knew they didn't have a "leg to stand on" in court, and in the end they probably would lose Robbie who was growing more important to them every day.

When Robbie was old enough to be enrolled in kindergarten, what should have been a day of hope and pride became a day of shame and panic. When the register noted the discrepancy in the name on the birth certificate and the name Marge and Jim had given their son, she wanted to know their relationship to the boy. What was their source of authority over him? Marge had rehearsed an explanation based on half truths and evasions to cover up the dishonorable business.

Kindergarten was only the beginning. As a trustful, happy little boy, Robbie's horizons are cloudless. But on the long road to manhood, he learns he has no status, not as the child of Marge and Jim nor anyone else. At each important step in life . . . college entrance, admission to a profession or trade, military training, voting, marriage, passport, even a license to drive a car . . . he will have to meet questions as to his legitimacy and his place in the human family.

Who is he? What is his real name? What are his legal rights to inheritance? And Marge and Jim must pay the heavy penalty of fear and insecurity, knowing they have no right to parenthood but love for a child.

This is one of the reasons the need for licensed adoption agencies such as The Children's Home Society is greater than ever. A test that every prospective parent should apply licensed (a qualified agency always complies with state laws). Does it place children near blood relatives? (This is never done by The Children's Home Society). Has it established a good reputation in the field of adoption (Make sure it is not a fly-by-night agency). Will it permit trial placements of children previously unknown to the adoptive parents? (This violates every sound principle of modern adoption procedure.)

Harriet L. Tynes, executive director of the Children's Home Society, has pointed out that a qualified children's agency will have the advice of competent pediatricians and lawyers who can advise on the medical and legal problems involved in every adoption case. This is a guarantee to parents that they will know the exact state of the child's health and that the adoption complies in full with all legal requirements.

At the Children's Home Society, an experienced caseworker is assigned to every couple. Every infant receives a complete physical examination and his background is studied by skilled caseworkers while a lawyer checks to make sure there are no legal entanglements.

When the right child is found for the right couple, the new parents may take their little boy or girl home. It usually takes from 12 to 15 months for formal and legal adoption procedures to be completed in North Carolina.

All of this service and counseling is offered free by The Children's Home Society. Expenses of the Society must be borne by voluntary contributions. It is the only state-wide voluntarily supported agency in North Carolina licensed to handle adoptions.

They Did It!

Who says you can't make a silk purse out of a sow's ear? May have been true back in the early days of the old adage, but it's not today.

Scientists of a manufacturing firm converted the gristle and skin of 100 pounds of sow's ears into glue, converted the glue into a filament, hardened and lubricated it, then dyed it to make a soft, lustrous thread. Using a small hand loom they wove the yarn into cloth from which they fashioned a lady's purse.

Chicago Fire Not So Hot

Property damage caused by the San Francisco earthquake and conflagration of 1906 amounted to $350,000,000, more than twice as much as that of the great Chicago fire of 1871.

is the watch word. A weight gain of from 15 to 20 pounds is usually regarded as best. It is sometimes more important for the prospective mother to learn what not to eat than what she should eat.

Some women have special problems and conditions that require individualized diets, but the average pregnant woman should have from 2,500 to 3,000 calories a day. The diet should contain one and a half pints of milk; one serving of citrus fruit or tomatoes, one of potatoes, at least two of leafy green or yellow vegetables, some of which should be raw; one serving of whole grain cereal and four slices of bread with butter; one serving of meat or fish, or such substitutes as beans, eggs, and cheese, and eggs and cheese three times a week.

It is important to remember that all the necessary foods must be present in the diet to protect the health of both mother and baby. One important nutrient cannot be left out or reduced, or one increased at the expense of another, without upsetting the balance.

Modern mothers are inclined to laugh at old superstitions about eating during pregnancy, such as the belief that a baby would have a strawberry mark if its mother were frustrated in her longing for strawberries. It's nonsense, but it's not a laughing matter. To give her baby the mark of glowing health, the mother will eat sensibly, following closely the diet prescribed by her doctor.

Store Basements Called Fire Traps

Many store basements are fire traps.

National Fire Protection Association figures show that of the 51,000 fires which cause $53,000,000 worth of destruction in stores each year, more than two out of five start in the basement.

removal was as high as 95 per cent. The results indicate an even higher proportion of mill waste could be treated.

"Even the much simpler standard trickling filter and settling process showed good results. Organic polluting materials were reduced about 58 per cent, and suspended solids removal was about 55 per cent.

"The experiments also produced good results in removing color from the waste, and odor was absent from the waste water when treatment was completed.

Conclusion Drawn

"The basic and significant conclusion to be drawn: Textile mill wastes can be treated successfully by biological process without any pretreatment other than control of flow of the waste to sewage to assure proper ratios in the mixture.

"The experiments are another step by Cone Mills in seeking solution to the waste problem and its relation to stream pollution. The firm has been actively concerned with the problem over a period of years. At the moment it also is giving considerable attention to waste treatment experiments for a proposed plant at San Marcos, Texas. Other textile firms, including this state's Cannon Mills at Kannapolis, also are carrying on research along these lines.

"Much of the technical information on the latest research success by Cone was revealed to the industry a few days ago at a symposium presided over by R. H. Souther, of Cone Mills Corp. at the annual convention of the American Association of Textile Chemists and Colorists in Atlanta, Ga. A number of papers on treating textile wastes and handling stream pollution problems were read."
